Hallow'en Revelers Meet In Countless Gay Parties

Fidelis Party

In entertaining their husbands at a Hallow'en party, members of the Fidelis class of the First Baptist church were privileged to stage the gay affair amidst the appropriate setting of a big barn at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Robinson, Main street, Tustin.

The Robinsons have fitted up the upper floor of the barn for just such informal affairs, and it provided the appropriately spooky atmosphere which is needful for Hallow'en. Cornstalks, grinning pumpkin faces, black cats and all the popular symbols of the season, seemed to feel especially at home, but no more so than the weirdly appareled guests who sought to conceal their own identities while guessing those of their fellow revelers. The hour of unmasking brought many surprises, and was followed by an interval of games and fortune telling.

Late in the evening, everyone was invited to the house where music, readings, games and refreshments completed a happy evening. Mrs. Mabel Elliott presided at the piano for a number of choruses in which the 60 or more guests joined with right good will.

In Mize Home

A truly mystic atmosphere prevailed last night around the home and grounds of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Mize at 602 South Ross street, where their daughter and son, Marjorie and Robert Mize presided as hosts, entertaining a number of their friends with a Hallow'en party.

On their arrival guests were taken to the rear gate where they were met by a gory-handed ghost who compelled them to write their names in red fluid. A trip to the "Phantom King's cave" followed, and disclosed the hidden hand. Bobbing for apples was the next diversion, and served as a source of relaxation for the excited young guests.

"Little Orphan Annie" as told by Mrs. Mize proved to be an unbelievably "spooky" story, and in the most thrilling part a slender ghost glided in and out, taking with him some of the young ladies. Flickering lights added to the true Hallow'en atmosphere.

Refreshments served at a prettily appointed table with favors, horns and hats came as a delightful conclusion to the evening's thrills.

Those sharing the hospitality of the young hosts, Robert and Marjorie, were Robert and Gordon Heath, Lucille Lambert, Margaret Rutan, Juanita Kirchner, Billy Jean Foster, Virginia Campbell, Emma-Lou Brooks, LaRue and Eileen Phillips, Dorothy Westover, David and Bill Welsh and Jack James.

Epworth League Party

Many were the church parties held last night, and among the most enjoyable was one shared by members of the Senior Epworth league of Spurgeon Memorial church.

The affair was held in the home of Miss Evelyn Morrison on East Washington avenue, and about 35 guests were present in costume. Games and music were enjoyed during the evening, and at a late hour refreshments carrying out a Hallow'en motif were served.

College Club Members Visited Haunted House

Riding on a hay wagon to the spookiest house available, members and guests of Jaycee O. K. club held their annual Hallow'en party Thursday night in a "haunted house" on corner of Fairview and Sullivan roads. All were told of the horrible murder that had taken place in that house seven years ago and so were full of delightful shivers when they reached the place. As nothing very thrilling happened all settled down to enjoy various old-fashioned games late hour refreshments were served, and informal dances until at a

In charge of the successful affair were Miss Elma Clare Hymer, Mitchell Hawkins, Kenneth Eastman, Abbott Mason, Ray Gleasner, Miss Louella Koons, Miss Helen King, Miss Bernice Keller, Laurin Griggs, Miss Helen Krone, Miss Anne Feldier, Miss Ruth Miller, Miss Marian Taylor, Miss Rebecca Neddermyer and Miss Army Porter.

Birthday Event

Witches, goblins and skeletons held full sway Friday night when Dr. and Mrs. Hubert E. Hall entertained in their home at 1112 North Olive street, honoring the 13th birthday anniversary of their son, Hubert. The home was cleverly decorated in Hallow'en symbols of every variety, and guests arrived in costume. Yellow butternut chrysanthemums were the chosen flowers, used in profusion throughout the rooms.

Proving to be most entertaining was one of the first games of the evening when guests were asked to guess the initials of their masked associates. Other contests were enjoyed, and in an advertising game Miss Barbara Davis and George Wallace won prizes. Adding to the Hallow'en atmosphere of the evening was a ghost story told by Miss M. Deborah Elliott, a class teacher of the assembled group.

At a late hour box lunches tied with huge orange bows were given to the girls, and after matching snapshots each one found her partner. Mr. and Mrs. Howard Rapp and Miss Patty Rapp assisted as hosts.

Those sharing the pleasant affair with the honor guest, Hubert Hall and his parents, Dr. and Mrs. Hall, were the Misses Betty Rapp, Betty-Jane Moore, Margaret Munro, Florence Liggett, Rosemary Moates, Barbara Davis, Lorraine Clark, Opal Moore, Frances Hall, Messrs. Franklin Guthrie, Jack Wallace, Max Mansfield, George Helberg, Gordon Lockett, Charles Spicer, Harvey Baker, Howard Rapp, and Dr. Margaret P. Baker and Miss Elliott.

Adult Endeavor Group

The church social hall of the United Brethren church was gay with the most interesting Hallow'en decorations last evening when the Adult Christian Endeavor society members and their families shared a delightful frolic. Games and contests aided the hours in fleeing quickly by for the many guests, and fortune telling was but one of the many diversions awaiting the fun-seeking participants. Refreshments were served late in the evening.

Many Surprises

Miss Margaret Coleman and her brothers, Richard and John Coleman, joined in extending hospitality to a number of friends Friday evening when the youngsters gathered in their home at 110 South Lyon street. As the score of young friends arrived in masked costumes they were led to the back yard which was appropriately decorated for the evening. Here various games were enjoyed.

A fishpond and angling for treasure trove, proved a source of much interest, and at the dinner hour guests shared in a welter roast.

Mrs. W. P. Coleman, a grandmother to the youthful hosts, who is visiting here from San Antonio, Tex., appeared early in the evening so cleverly disguised as a witch that even her relatives were almost mystified as to her identity.

A light refreshment course concluded the delightful evening. Mrs. D. E. Coleman was assisted in serving by Mrs. Emmett Purvis and Mrs. Charles Morris.

Those present other than the hosts, Miss Coleman and Richard and John Coleman were Marvella Galbraith, Frances Whitaker, Margaret Jaberg, Paula Purvis, Irene Marshall, Ellen and Charlotte Cozad, Lula and Louise Bowden, Kenneth Alken, Ted Shaw, Charles Morris, Elton Bishop, Jackie and Billy Bagnell, Billy Bob McFree.

In Church Parlors

It was indeed a merry group that formed a Hallow'en party last evening in the dining room of the United Presbyterian church, when members of the Baracca class of the church met for a gala occasion. The room was festive with the season's decorations, brightened by the clever costumes of the masqueraders. Following unmasking, a short business session of the class was held, at which officers were elected for the coming six months. The new executives included Steele Finley, teacher; John Kuyper, assistant teacher; Cornelius Reandera, president; Mrs. Clayton Harvis, vice president; Mrs. Allen, secretary; Mrs. Ray Millman, assistant secretary; Mrs. Arthur McFadden, treasurer; Mrs. Bert Porter, social commissioner.

A round of games was then introduced, each event in turn appearing more hilarious than the last. Concluding the evening, refreshments of cider and pumpkin pie with whipped cream were served.

A capable committee, headed by Mrs. Will McBurney, was responsible for the delightful evening of entertainment.

Guests present included Messrs. Albert Finley, M. Gossage, Bruce Gibson, Clayton Harris, Walter Harbath, Will McBurney, Arthur McFadden, A. Ostrander, Bert Porter, Cornelius Reandera, Joe Thompson, Martin Warren, E. Wilber, and Mesdames Marie Bradford, Jeanette Johnston, Dave McBurney, Ray Millman, W. P. Read, Scott Torrens, Adeline Winslow, Miss Sadie Shields, and Messrs. W. H. McPeak, W. W. Hoy, and S. H. Finley.

POVERTY STRICKEN REVELERS STORM S. A. COUNTRY CLUB

Among the motley crowds that laughed and sang, danced, shouted and rollicked their way through a noisily joyous Hallow'en, none exceeded in merriment and gaiety that crowd assembled at Santa Ana Country club for the year's outstanding frolic for the membership. Gone were the richly formal evening gowns, the correct black and white of masculine evening wear, the quiet dignity of the usual Country club function, and in their places were rags and tatters, old shoes and torn stockings, roughened tresses and unshaven chins, as members sought to outdo each other in the poverty of their attire.

And oh what a scene was this, my brothers! Can you imagine a very revelry of rags? A Coxey's army of down-trodden hoboes? A semblance of the "submerged tenth," rising to the surface for one mad round of revelry? King of the masquerade was not present, but his beggar maid was there in duplicate and triplicate, and rows and tiers, and each one raggeder than the last. In anticipation of just such a mad and merry throng, Mr. and Mrs. T. F. McGilvray had converted the stately clubhouse into a fit setting for Walpurgis night where these 1930 witches danced to the strains of the liveliest of music—music which fitted the carefree mood of the guests as their costumes fitted the carefree holiday.

This intriguing program was furnished by the Club orchestra with its co-directors, James Merigold and R. E. Barnes, and provided a rich tapestry upon which was woven the bright design of the evening's revelry. Supper was an enjoyable interlude in the festivities, and was served in country fashion upon tables lighted by candles and decorated in harmony with the hall room appointments.

In the grand march of the late evening, when Judge F. C. Drumm and George Shattuck acted as costume judges, probably the greatest applause was won by Mrs. Carl Mock. Mrs. Mock easily led the merry-makers in the originality of her costume, for she appeared in draped riding habit, cocked hat and spurred boots of an old-time belle of the hunt ball. Then when she entered the grand march actually pulling along a huge effigy of her prancing steed, the fun was uproarious. Mrs. Mock won the fancy dress prize for three consecutive years by the bizarre shabbiness of her costume, so last night went in for originality rather than shabbiness.

Costume Prizes First prize in poverty went to C. V. Davis, who was rewarded with a box of Jonathan apples. Mrs. F. P. Mead's finery won her the second prize of a box of cooking apples, while Mrs. Edward B. Van Meter's attire secured the third prize of a sack of potatoes.

Guests formed in merry groups for the supper hour, arranging to have tables together, although there were a number of tables where hosts were entertaining close friends. Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Mead had Dr. and Mrs. Vincent C. Crowl, Miss Lolita Mead, Miss M. Lock Diehl, Keller, Mrs. Charles Graham, Mr. and Mrs. George Gohard, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Apocleary, Mr. and Mrs. John Murdy, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Beem, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Fox, Mr. and Mrs. F. Fox, Mr. and Mrs. Woods, Mr. and Mrs. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Huff, Mr. and Mrs. Musgrave, Mr. and Mrs. Russell, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Letson, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Holt, Mrs. Young, Mrs. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. John Holt, Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Heil and Mr. and Mrs. Gregory.

Hold Card Party A Hallow'en card party was given by Mr. and Mrs. Ray McCormick in their home at which were entertained Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Burry and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Washburn, of Huntington Beach. After cards the tables were set with Hallow'en table covers for the serving of sandwiches, pumpkin pie and coffee.

In another lively group were Messrs. and Mesdames Edward Holmes, J. Ralph Crenshaw, Lawrence Benis, Charles Swanner, Lew Blodgett, Clyde Jenken, Ernest Winkler, Robert Fernandez, and Dr. and Mrs. John Wehrly Jr., and Dr. and Mrs. H. M. Spears.

Seated with Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Hoyle were the Misses Beth Westcott, Alice Majors, Ann Tarver, Ann Reeves, Virginia Berry, Jeanne Rowland, Jeanne Peacock, Patty Rowland, Carol House, Doris Goff, Phyllis Pope, Ray Carothers, Lucie Holmes, Messrs. Bob Hanson, Billy Hanson, Tevis Westgate, Richard Ewert, Mac Watson, North Bab-bitt, Alvin Marsh, Bruce Vegely, Ned Gray, John Callahan, Jerry Arnett, Bob Coffing and Bill Lind-say.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Mock, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cogan, Mr. and Mrs. Nat Neff and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Chapman formed another merry party, while at a nearby table were Mr. and Mrs. Paul Williams, Mr. and Mrs. B. J. MacMullen, Mr. and Mrs. C. V. Davis, Judge and Mrs. F. C. Drumm and Mr. and Mrs. E. K. Gerhard. Adding to the liveliness at this table was a birthday cake presented to Mr. MacMullen.

The club table probably had the most genuine fun of all, and included among its revelers, Messrs. and Mesdames Don L. Andrews, J. LaMont McFadden, Loyal K. King, J. L. Bushard, Howard Rapp, Percy Davis, F. L. Purinton, J. H. Bray, A. B. Rousseau, Paul Williams, J. H. Bray and their guests, Dr. and Mrs. A. K. Loerch, Miss Louise Maloney, Miss Fay Bushard, Mrs. Lela Framheim, Messrs. John Norton, Frederick Elliott, T. H. West and George Shattuck.

Another group included Messrs. and Mesdames Dean Collier, L.

GABRIEL FAURE

BY RUTH ANDREWS

Gabriel Faure is especially renowned today as one of the foremost pioneers in the development of modern French music. To Chabrier and Faure are now attributed the responsibility of blazing the new and individual paths in which subsequent French modernists tread boldly. Not only is Faure credited with starting that rebirth of French piano music that came quickly to unique perfection beneath the spell of Debussy, but as a song writer such wealth of lyric beauty has poured from his fluent pen that he repeatedly termed the "French Schubert."

Born in Pamiers, France, May 13, 1845, Faure's childhood was spent in a home environment favorable for his development, his father a school official of character and ability. Young Gabriel's inclination for musical study was favored, and during his ninth year, he transferred to Paris, entering a semi-religious musical institution, where he made rapid progress.

Faure was fortunate in that Camille Saint-Saens, famous French composer, was a teacher in this school. The renowned master took great interest in the lad, devoting much time to his instruction, acquainting him with the classics, also the works of the German romantics.

Young Faure remained at this school for about ten years, taking many honors in piano, harmony and composition as well as organ, to which he had devoted special study, and in which he had achieved great proficiency. At 21 he went to Rennes, in Brittany, for a time, to become organist of the Saint Sauveur church there, and for four years lived in semi-retirement, in this secluded spot. His first collection of songs was composed there.

Several years later Faure returned to Paris, to become organist at the church of Notre Dame de Clignancourt, but with the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, he enlisted, and served throughout. When the war was concluded, he received an appointment as teacher in the school where he had previously received his musical education, at the same time officiating as organist in several important posts.

Faure's thirty-second year was an eventful one, marked by his appointment as choir director in the famous Church of the Madeleine, also by a trip to Germany in company with his former teacher, Saint Saens, for the purpose of hearing production of the latter's opera "Samson and Delilah," under the direction of Franz Liszt. Later trips to German musical centers followed, and in this way Faure became acquainted with the Wagnerian masterpieces, which he grew to admire intensely.

Now with maturity, Faure began slowly to win recognition as a composer. His work which was greatest possible honors.

Faure, who excels especially as a song writer, has composed a wealth of lyric gems that are outstanding for their rich poetic content, marked individuality both in melodic invention and harmonic treatment. As a composer, refinement is one of Faure's most noticeable qualities, one which has made it possible for him to stand forth as one of the foremost interpreters of poets of the symbolist school of French literature, among them Paul Verlaine and Albert Samain.

Faure's power of portraying moods in music was great, his clarity of harmonic treatment of special mention, and his piano more than ordinarily appropriate. His talents were essentially French and to his influence many French modernists, one of the foremost of whom was Debussy, acknowledge a great debt.

SANTA ANA S. A. Trable Ciel Club

Considerable progress is being made during recent weekly rehearsals of the Treble Ciel club, Santa Ana's popular ladies' choral ensemble, now working enthusiastically for the past several weeks under the direction of William Clare Hall, former vocal coach and authority of Chicago. The club is now making plans for participation in two public programs prior to the Christmas holidays, one of which will be a concert to be offered in a local church, also in connection with the Christmas concert to be given by the Santa Ana Municipal band sometime in December, under the direction of D. C. Clanton.

According to a recent statement by Miss Ethel Coffman, president of the club, many new and interesting songs are being prepared by the ensemble for these forthcoming events.

Santa Ana Symphony Orchestra

With the opening of the winter concert series of various symphonic organizations of Southern California, including the symphony orchestra of Los Angeles, Glendale, Long Beach, Santa Monica and Laguna Beach, some of which have already been heard in their first program, while others are planning to open in November, many local music lovers are beginning to inquire concerning Santa Ana's own symphony orchestra.

Up to the present time plans are rather vague in regard to this season's local concert series by the local organization which has been heard in highly commendable programs during the past six seasons, the future of the organization being dependent upon the attitude of music-lovers and public spirited citizens of this community.

SANTA MONICA Santa Monica Symphony

Santa Monica symphony orchestra will present the opening concert of its winter season early in November, with Hugo Scherzer, pianist, as soloist, playing the Grieg Concerto.

It is of interest to note that a society has recently been formed in Santa Monica, known as the "Friends of Music," which plans to back the orchestra, and aid in developing music in the Santa Monica bay district.

BOOK REVIEWS

By MARY BURKE KING

Quiet Street, Michael Ossorgin, published by the Lincoln MacVeagh, the Dial Press.

A measure of intelligence is one's adaptability to changed conditions and circumstances. It is logical to conclude, therefore, that the intelligent people of Russia found it easier to adjust themselves to the changes of the revolution than did other people.

In "Quiet Street" we have a story of the Russian revolution as it affected a group of intellectual people. There is a definite charm to the home life of Ivan Alexandrovitch, a famous ornithologist, his wife and their grand-daughter, Tanyusha, a young girl of 17, when the story opens. The peaceful calm of their afternoons and evenings is more characteristic of English home life than the excitability and vitality one usually regards as typically Russian. Tanyusha's music teacher regularly on Sunday comes to the house to play and several friends gather to listen, students, professors, a young girl friend of Tanyusha.

Then came cataclysmic change, the revolution. The people of the story, with one or two exceptions, are not involved in the political angle of the revolution. They are made conscious of it as it presses upon them economically. Tanyusha plays the piano regularly at workmen's clubs because in return for that entertainment she receives necessary food which she would not otherwise have. Another member of the little group, a professor, also entertains at the same places, as a clown.

The characters of the story do not become bitter over their experiences, nor angry. They remain sweet and when they are together they do not dwell upon their circumstances in a morbid manner. Their attitude throws the pathos of their situation into relief.

When the musician has his piano taken, the instrument which means more to him than life, he is childlike in his grief. When Vassaya, a student, becomes a "bagman" and goes out from Moscow, into the country to trade for provisions and returns with typhus it is moving. "The characters are indelibly drawn. For example, there is the executioner who in his little cell puts to death countless people condemned by the revolutionaries and becomes a maniac when his wife forces him to kill a pig she had been fattening up for food. And there is "the trunk," one who suffered worse than death in the war.

The book is full of pictures of recent conditions in Russia. For example, "To be smart meant . . . to be wearing clean linen and well-mended clothes, no matter how senseless of all material, buttons and trimmings, former dandies ingeniously contrived to make themselves suits out of curtains, and linen from tablecloths; while ladies wore hats made of green and red cloth ripped off card tables and desks in the soviet offices. Prosecution had been attempted, but abandoned: the offense was so difficult to prove. As for well-pressed trousers, they were not only considered to be a prejudice of the bourgeoisie, but actually something in the nature of a defiance of the new ways of thinking."

"Quiet Street" is not a difficult work of first violin of the Bartlett-Frankel Quartet of Los Angeles this season, which will mean an active year of chamber music work.

During the past summer Noack was much enjoyed in his role as concertmaster of the famous Hollywood Bowl Orchestra, during the annual series of "summer symphonies under the stars."

Galli-Curci in England During the past month Mme. Amelita Galli-Curci, famous coloratura and former opera star, has been concertizing throughout the British Isles. Her tour of the islands will extend through December. She will appear in recital in London November 16.

Galli-Curci will return to America shortly before Christmas, and in January will open an extensive concert tour of the United States, which will extend into late spring.

book to read. It is not involved nor philosophical. The emphasis is placed on the characters, and they are really delightful, like those in "The Good Companions" and "Button Hill."

Lone Cowboy, by Will James, published by Charles Scribner's Sons.

"Lone Cowboy" is the story of a small orphaned boy growing up among hunters, trappers and cowboys, passing from childhood to maturity without the advantages of any schooling, following the trails of wandering cowboys and finally emerging an artist and writer of the west as he had reason to know it.

Whether or not "Lone Cowboy" is the actual or approximate life story of Will James only the author knows, but the journey through life with the orphaned boy is full of pathos, hard work, and riding. As the author puts it, it is the recollections "from the times I first remember my raising among cowboys and trappers, my teachings from them, the open country and animals more teachings after I grew up while always setting on a horse sowing my wild oats—reaping 'em, cutting my wisdom teeth on the sharp edges of experience and the finally lingering and reeling for the high points."

Will James was born under the open sky beside his father's camp wagon, days away from any doctor; his mother died when he was a year old, so his father boarded him with kindly folk, and when he was killed by an enraged steer, a French trapper, pal of his father, took him to his trapping lodge in winter and to his prospect camp in summer.

The boy was ten or thereabouts when he saw his first town and was immensely interested in little folk like himself, they were the first he had seen to his recollection and it hadn't occurred to him that there were any but grown folk in the world beside him. At fifteen his foster father fell into an icy river and was drowned. The boy was left with a cart containing a trapper's outfit, two ponies that had been given to him and his two horses that were used to pull the cart and a few hundred in cash. From then on he followed the life a roving cowboy from Canada into Mexico. He relates the occasion upon which he borrowed or stole horses, to escape from a mixup in which he was a victim of circumstances, and how later he became entangled with a cattle rustler and still later stealing some on his own initiative and shortly after serving time in Arizona penitentiary for that offense.

Freed from prison, he goes back to riding the herd, capturing wild horses and breaking broncos. From the time he was a small boy, he would spend hours sketching animals especially horses, but with no financial success. Finally after a long series of discouragements, instructions to brighten magazine covers and stories, in the urging of his wife, following many avowals that he would some day write a story, he does it to prove to himself and his wife that it is actually something in the nature of a defiance of the new ways of thinking."

Modern Conversation, by Harrington Hall, published by Brewster Warren, Inc.

This is a really fundamental book on the art of conversation. Probably every woman would like to be a sufficiently skilled conversationalist to have a solon. And certainly if she does not have that desire she does want to be able to fill in gaps in conversation. "Modern Conversation" is a really learned discussion of the matter, with bits of personal observations by the author which make it readable as well as a textbook. The author's theory, presented in the beginning of the book, that each individual is a Walpole's "Fortitude" and "The Medici" by G. F. Young. This month the books published will be Huxley's "Point Counter Point" and "The Old Wives Tale" and "Tom Jones."

Lida Rose McCabe has written a biography of the wife of LaFayette, which she has called "Arden Adrienne." According to Miss McCabe's highly absorbing account, Madame de LaFayette, nee Adrienne de Noailles, lived one of the most amazing lives in history. Born in the most sheltered of aristocratic circles, thrust by her marriage to Gilbert Motier de LaFayette into the limelight of international affairs and then exposed with LaFayette to poverty and threats of death, she yet maintained an undimmed and vibrant spirit, and a courageous devotion to her husband such as the world has seldom seen. Against a background of alternating triumph and defeats, and of the lurid days of the French Revolution, Adrienne and her husband lived, one of the most perfect of love stories.

"The Swan Shakespeare," edited by C. B. Purdom, is a complete edition of Shakespeare's plays especially prepared and illustrated for those interested in the plays as works for the stage.

The costumes of the principal characters are illustrated and there are many designs for settings. Notes on each play are included also on the characters, costumes, properties and music. Jean Campbell has done the drawings of costumes and scenes.

Praise from an authentic and authoritative source has fallen to Frederick R. Becholdt for his recently published "Giants of the Old West" (Century). The book editor of the El Paso Times (El Paso, Texas, being in the heart of the West of which Becholdt writes) says in reviewing Becholdt's latest book, "From a careful reading of all the greats and near-greats of this field, has been formed the opinion that in this branch of historical writing Fred Becholdt has no equal."

Book Notes . . .

The September books of the Modern Library were Somerset Maugham's "Of Human Bondage" and Goethe's "Faust." In the future that company promises Hugh composite of one or more of six different types is rather disconcerting because it appears for a number of pages that much depends upon one's successful analysis of his or her type and that is very difficult for most people. The types are "The Intellectual, the gay, sparkling, vivacious type, the frank, open type; the 'Eternal Feminine,' the sophisticated, the temperamental, poetic type." But regardless whether or not one is successful at analyzing his own type, there are many valuable suggestions in the book as to means of analyzing other people and disposing them in one's favor.

One does, in places, resent the exposure of certain "tricks" of the trade but in the exchange of "tricks" one is sure to come out ahead in a book as replete with ideas and suggestions and psychology as is this one. The only absolutely reliable technique for being funny, says this author, is having our listeners laugh with us. Most people do not rely upon it because they are afraid of being laughed at, but they can't laugh at one when they are laughing with one.

Everyone who reads this book will be surprised that there is so much to be said on the subject. Laughter, sympathy, narration, snubbing, flattery, argument, moods, imagery, entrances and exits, the art of listening and many more things are touched upon. The detail of the book is sensed by a reference to a chapter on "Fashionable phrases" where they are picked up and then they may be varied and then dropped.

Probably the most successful conversationalist is the one who is so sensitive that she or he has already felt the advantages of many of the suggestions in this book. Such an one does not need the book and will not particularly value it; but those who must make a very conscious effort to be successful with people; who are shy and tongue-tied and always think of a dozen reasons why they should not say everything that comes into their mind to say will appreciate it.

WEEKLY SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

HOW CHRIST GIVES STRENGTH

The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for Nov. 2. How Christ Gives Strength. Mark 8:27-29; Luke 22:31-34; John 18:25-27; 21:15-17.

By WM. E. GILROY, D. D.
Editor of The Congregationalist

The general theme of our lesson, "How Christ Gives Strength," is studied here with the valuable help of a particular example. Our study is of Simon Peter and the way in which through the help and power of Christ he came from weakness to strength.

No character in the Bible, outside of the Master himself, has so appealed to human life as Peter. John was a stronger and nobler type; Paul far exceeded him in sustained impetuosity and consistency. But Peter was so human in his weakness and in his impulsiveness. He is an illustration of what human nature has been all through the ages, and it is in such types as Peter that the real power of the Gospel is displayed.

It was in the salvation of Peter that Jesus understood him. He understood Peter a great deal better than Peter understood himself, for despite his weakness Peter was something of a braggart. His impulsiveness led him into declarations and purposes that his will and character, until Christ had strengthened these, were not sufficient to carry through.

Never Lost Confidence

There is a world of meaning in the words of Jesus to Peter, "I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not." Today we have lost much of the reality of the doctrine of the intercessor. There does not come into our lives with the reality that it ought to have, the fact that Jesus is the mediator and intercessor, making supplication for us that our faith should not fail.

Like most of us, Peter did not learn much from experience. Even in the moments when he was in the greatest danger he felt the greatest confidence in himself. When Jesus spoke of him as being sifted as wheat, he replied with a declaration that nothing could overthrow his faith.

It required rare patience to deal with such a man, and the Master's own humanity in its gentleness and love is revealed nowhere more fully than in that loyalty and persistency with which he stood by Peter and lifted him when he fell. It is a human drama which had a glorious issue, for as the last tragedy and defeat were turned into triumph, the disciple who had denied his Lord was uplifted and reclaimed through love and confidence, and the evidence of the trust that Jesus imposed in him, and of his own worthiness of that trust, was found in the beautiful commission to Peter to feed the Master's lambs.

Weak, Though Powerful

It is a story that even with this climax has continued chapters, for though Peter had learned the vital lesson and had found a new strength the old weakness did not entirely disappear. His impulsiveness at times had in it aspects of prejudice. A man's will may sometimes be strengthened while his mind is still obscured by blindness and his heart unpurged of prejudice.

We find Peter a little later in the early life of the church not quite freed from spiritual pride, and it required a vision of the house-top with various animals coming down in a sheet to remind Peter that things that God had cleansed were not common or unclean.

There is always a richer and larger work of grace to be effected in our lives that our wills may be transformed, but the spirit that guides our wills needs enlightenment and purging from all prejudice and selfishness. Yet when one takes the life of Peter as a whole it gloriously expresses the power that Christ reveals in weakness and the salvation that saves effectually.

The traditions that concern his death glorify the story of Peter. The tradition is that Peter, his weakness upmost, was running from Rome and martyrdom, when he met the Master. "Quo vadis?" said Peter, "where are you going?" The Master replied, "To Rome to be crucified in your stead." Whereupon the real Peter conquered and Peter in the strength of the Master returned to Rome to make his last witness to the faith.

The Church Invites You

WHY BELONG TO THE CHURCH

Dr. Daniel Poling says, "I ought to belong to the church because of hope; hope that lives when promises are dead; hope that paves the way for progress; hope that visions peace and social justice; hope for time and eternity—the great hope that casts its anchor behind Jesus Christ."

"I ought to belong to the church because of the strong men in it who need reinforcing; the weak men in it who need encouraging; the rascals in it who need rebuking. If I say that I'm not good enough, my humility commends me. If I sit in the seat of the scornful, my inactivity condemns me."

Why not accept the invitation and COME TO CHURCH NEXT SUNDAY?

—D. Carl Yoder.

Discussion on Questions S.S. Lesson

Discussion Questions, Simon Peter, (from Weakness to Strength) Mark 8:27-29; Luke 22:31-34; John 18:25-27; 21:15-17 for Sunday, November 2.

1. Why does a teacher ask questions?
2. Why must each one answer the question "Who is Christ?"
3. How distinguish bravery from boasting?
4. In what ways is our love of God and man tested?
5. What are the strong points in Peter? The weak points?
6. How explain Peter's change from weakness to strength?
7. How is Christ to be realized as a helper today?

Clericus says: "The man that is sure of his purpose based on God's will will do with his might what he undertakes and rise to the height of any crisis; a man's courage should be calm and sane and should never carry him into vain words."

Lesson Prayer, "Lead us to a true confession of the Lord and in his might undertake great things for God; help us to realize the meaning of fellowship and partnership with God."

The Better Way

Bad Business or Good Business

A bad business is one in which the whole process makes more unhappiness than happiness. If we ask the salesman what the object of business is, he will reply possibly, "To sell 25 per cent more goods this year than last." If we ask the efficiency engineer, the answer will be "To make more and better goods more cheaply than ever." If we ask the owner, the answer might be "To make more profits."

Now all these answers leave out the human element. To be sure, the engineer may say "We find that we cannot produce efficiency unless we look out for the efficiency of the workers." But all the time he is not thinking of them; he's thinking of the business.

Why could not the aim of business be stated as to produce goods that will materially benefit those who buy them and give them some quality in those goods that their money can never pay for; and meanwhile do it in such a way that the owners and managers will be able to grow more Christian and more genuinely happy from day to day, while the workers will grow more healthy, more contented and more eager to share the Christian motive with their employers?

D. CARL YODER.

Our greatest effort should be directed towards mastering ourselves.

The Romans rightly employed the same word (virtus) for two designations. It meant courage, used in the physical sense of valour in the moral. A happy use this—since there is no higher virtue than the courage to conquer ourselves.

There is a much used bromide to the effect that "he who can not command himself cannot command others" — no overworked aphorism is less true. There are men who have spent years of toil and hardship to gain a position where they could master other men, machines or markets only to find in the end that their mastery was a mirage—a delusion that carried no innate satisfaction with it.

They mastered their surroundings admirably—they commanded a hum of effective activity about themselves that gained from weaker characters and a fickle public notoriety and approbation—yet separated from the stimulating influence of their own bustle and stir they led miserable lives because they knew deep down during the quiet of self examination that they had never learned to master themselves.

LOST ISLAND

MOSCOW—"Lonesome Islands" in the Arctic region is lost. This island, plotted by previous expeditions into the northland, was recorded as lost by the Soviet Arctic expedition aboard the icebreaker Sedoff. The expedition reports that the spot where the island was charted and no trace of it could be found.

Church Forum

(Send church and Sunday school problems in question form to the church editor; question with answer will appear in later issue.)

How make the program of missionary education most effective in lower departments of the church school?

The three important elements in missionary education are knowledge, attitudes and practice.

Proper knowledge of the life of those in other lands is essential for a friendly world attitude; realistic stories with similar experiences to ours ought to be presented; much knowledge can be imparted by dramatizing stories; folk stories and songs furnish valuable knowledge of people of other lands may be gained by having people of different nationalities presented. Intelligent interest in others needs to be aroused to the place where there will be naturally developed a program of sharing which may often be expressed in giving money to definite missionary purposes. "Worship may be fostered in connection with missionary education by the thought that those in other lands are children of God and members of His family."

WINTERSBURG

WESTMINSTER, Nov. 1.—Prof. James Monroe, principal of the Westminster elementary school, has purchased the house and lot belonging to St. Darling, of Los Angeles, former local man. The property adjoins Mr. Monroe's home on the south and he is taking steps to improve the property.

Westminster's boys' and girls' ball teams played a practice game Tuesday with Seal Beach teams, the boys winning from Seal Beach by a score of 4 to 0 and the girls by a score of 21 to 8. The games were played at Westminster school Tuesday. On Wednesday the Westminster team and the Hoover school team played a game at Hoover, the Westminster boys being winners by a score of 9 to 6. The last was a league game.

The Westminster Americanization class was entertained with an educational film Thursday evening at Hoover school by Mrs. Florence Summers, Americanization teacher.

There are now 30 pupils in this class and local men and women who are preparing for naturalization attend the naturalization class at Talbert which Mrs. Summers holds for the entire Huntington Beach high school district.

In Business Not For Money

The only man who ever refused a partnership in J. P. Morgan and company is said to have been George Perkins. When he was asked why, he said, "Because I never have been in this world merely to make money. I learned early that any man who starts out simply to make money never gets very far, for he will ruin his health, or sacrifice his friends, or drive so hard that there is nothing in it. I was brought up in the life insurance business. It is not a charitable institution, but it is a business in which you deal with human beings and where you are doing something for people."

Business can be managed by higher motives than money making. Mrs. Perkins early in life had instilled in him Christian principles and he would make all business tries in both ancient and modern times. His investigations began with records of earth eating in China.

Traces of the custom have been found in Indo-China, Malaysia, Polynesia, Melanesia, Australia, India, Burma, Siam, Central Asia, Siberia, Persia, Arabia, Africa, Europe, North America, Mexico, Central America and South America.

As a rule not every kind of earth is eaten, says Dr. Laufer, but those kinds which recommend themselves through certain qualities of color, odor, flavor, softness and plasticity.

Geophagy occurs among the most civilized nations as well as among primitive tribes. It bears no relation to climate, race, creed or culture. It is a habit that occurs among individuals and not among any particular tribal or social group.

The women of Spain, says Dr. Laufer, once believed the eating of earth was an aid to a delicate complexion and the ladies of Spanish aristocracy in the 17th century had such a passion for geophagy that the ecclesiastic and secular authorities took steps to combat the evil.

Religion means daily duty and not occasional ecstasies.

Smiling costs nothing but often avails much.

NEWS FROM THE AUTOMOBILE WORLD

PAGENKOPP HAS BEEN U. S. TIRE DEALER 1 YEAR

One year ago the Pagenkopp Brothers were made distributors for the well known United States Tires and at that time Charles C. Hinton joined the organization of Pagenkopp Super Service to take charge of the tire sales.

Mr. Hinton has been active in the tire business in Santa Ana for the past fifteen years and is well informed in that line.

"We feel," says Mr. Hinton, "that the U. S. Royal Master Tire has no equal in beauty or performance and that very few tires have been built which come up to the standard of the famous Royal Cord."

"We handle nothing but first class merchandise and the boys have made a multitude of friends through their fair, honest dealings and courteous service."

"The Perlin battery is another item added to our fine line of merchandise this year, and it is one that we are proud to boast of," says Mr. Hinton. "We got our first shipment of Perlin batteries July 8th, and have already more than 200 Perlins in service."

"The latest feature added to our service department is the installation of the latest and most up-to-date wheel aligning machine on the market."

"It is our desire to help the car owner to get more service out of his tires and add pleasure to his driving."

"We check the cars free of charge and courteously point out and explain the needed adjustments. Few people realize what excessive tire wear costs them."

Lincoln Brakes Dispel Worry In Rotten Weather

Slippery roads during autumn storms do not disturb Lincoln drivers, because Lincoln brakes are of the most advanced and powerful design.

The foot brakes are internal-expanding and self-energizing on all four wheels. The hand brake is internal-expanding and independent of all other brakes. Each foot brake has three shoes 2 1/4 inches wide. Two of these are set in action by the foot pedal, the third being articulated with one of the other two and set in action by it, and accentuated by the momentum of the car itself. This arrangement requires much less physical effort on the part of the driver and produces a surer, firmer grip.

The linings of each brake shoe used on the Lincoln are ground and tested carefully for roundness and trueness. The testing machine is a dial-faced gauge, divided into thousands of an inch, which reveal any irregularity in the surface of the shoe.

200,000 TESTS AT STUDEBAKER

Over 200,000 tests and inspections are made yearly by Studebaker to assure high quality in its product. Inspections start with the raw material, steels, lacquers, upholstery materials—virtually everything Studebaker buys. For example, samples of shipments of valve springs are put into test motors running at high speed (below). For hours these valve spring are operated at speeds equal to 55 miles per hour on the road, to make sure they satisfy Studebaker specifications.

Safety With Speed Nash's New Slogan

KENOSHA, Wis., Nov. 1.—Safety at sustained, high speeds—the essential motor car requirement in runs, say to Yellowstone, to the week-end lodge, or in the swift, gay flights over open roads of the west—is a subject of intense interest this year to motor enthusiasts.

And nowhere is the engineering development along this vital line of improvement illustrated more forcibly than in the new and strikingly advanced models of fine motor cars introduced by the Nash Motors company to set higher economic standards and give motorists "a new deal for today's dollar." It was pointed out today by C. H. Bliss, sales manager of the company.

"To the experienced motorist this revelation of the latest mechanical achievements wrought by the manufacturer who for so many years has set the pace in producing high quality automobiles at moderate cost, tells a graphic story of constant improvement, constant effort toward better and safer motoring conditions and constant progress toward the modern ideal in motor transportation," he said.

"Students of highway transportation, who have waited eagerly for the opportunity to study in detail the engineering features of the four new Nash groups of cars—the Twin-Ignition Eight-90, Twin-Ignition Eight-80, the powerful Eight-70, and the new Nash Six—point to three primary attainments which particularly fit them for the rigors of present day traffic."

RATE SYSTEM IS INTRODUCED BY DODGE BROS.

Simultaneously with the announcement of its complete new line of motor trucks, Dodge Brothers introduced a new system of rating the carrying capacity of each model which has been pronounced a distinct advance over any load rating plan that has ever been developed in the motor truck industry.

New type caution plates posted conspicuously on the instrument panel of each truck accurately show the operator the true capacity of the vehicle. The caution plate lists a series of front and rear weights, which vary according to the size of the tires with which the particular model is equipped. This form of rating the proper carrying capacity was decided upon because the operator may easily check the load by weighing first the front and then the rear of the laden vehicle on standard scales. It is stated definitely on the plate that the manufacturer's warranty is voided if the total front and rear weights for a given tire size combination are exceeded.

Overloading has persisted over a long period of years as a common abuse of motor trucks, Dodge engineers explain, and as a result manufacturers, particularly of the larger capacity trucks, have adopted a very conservative rating which does not in any way represent a true measure of the load carrying ability of the truck under all operating conditions, they state.

AMERICAN CARS ARE POPULAR IN PARIS

PARIS, Oct. 25.—American-made automobiles found unusual favor with Royalty at the Paris Salon which closed here October 12. Among the purchasers of American cars was the Maharajah of Kashmir who ordered a Cord front drive Cabriolet model for immediate delivery.

The Cord which the potentate selected was a standard production model, a two-passenger Cabriolet in a pearl over black color. Raised portions of the car and body heads are in jet black with striping in red. The wire wheels are also in black with upholstery in a red Spanish leather.

King Carol of Roumania made the first purchase at the Salon, a Duesenberg, also an American-made automobile. This is his majesty's second car built by the Auburn organization, he having purchased a Cord front drive only a few days previously for his personal use.

COMFORT IN NEW FRANKLIN CAR DESIGNS

Modern automotive engineers are now endeavoring to eliminate those limiting factors that influence motor car design. The ever increasing demand for luxury in driving includes flexibility in both the engine performance and chassis, declares R. W. Townsend, Franklin dealer.

"Flexibility of the chassis and body as well have much to do with shock absorption," he explained. "This type of flexibility has been limited in some automobiles because of the necessary protection of the radiator from twists and strains. Now that the air-cooled engine has qualified so notably in power output, automotive engineers also recognize it as a factor in flexible construction because rigid radiator supports are unnecessary."

"In a roundabout way this flexibility emanating from air-cooling also is reflected in the use of full elliptic springs which Franklin is able to use with such great effect in riding comfort. It is also partially due to the fact that the entire chassis structure of an air-cooled automobile is permitted to be a shock-absorbing unit rather than a shock-resisting unit."

"Air cooling, by bringing about weight reduction, has had its effect on shock reduction and in the responsiveness of spring and other comfort elements. According to a growing weight of engineering opinion, relaxed driving due to new advantages in air cooling, has arrived."

"E. S. Marks, chief engineer of the Franklin Automobile company claims that many new Franklin owners report driving their cars 500 miles or more a day without the fatigue they formerly considered unavoidable in traveling half that distance. It is seldom anyone can guess how fast they are going in a Franklin without looking at the speedometer. At a 70-mile speed most of them guess 50 miles an hour."

$600,000,000 FOR CALIFORNIA HIGHWAYS SOON

BY ELWOOD SQUIRES (Special to The Register) (United Press Staff Correspondent)

SACRAMENTO, Nov. 1.—(UP)—California will have approximately $600,000,000 to spend on its highways during the next ten years.

Estimated by the state highway division and the California Taxpayers' association in independent surveys, this startling amount is being used as a basis by the highway division for its program during that period.

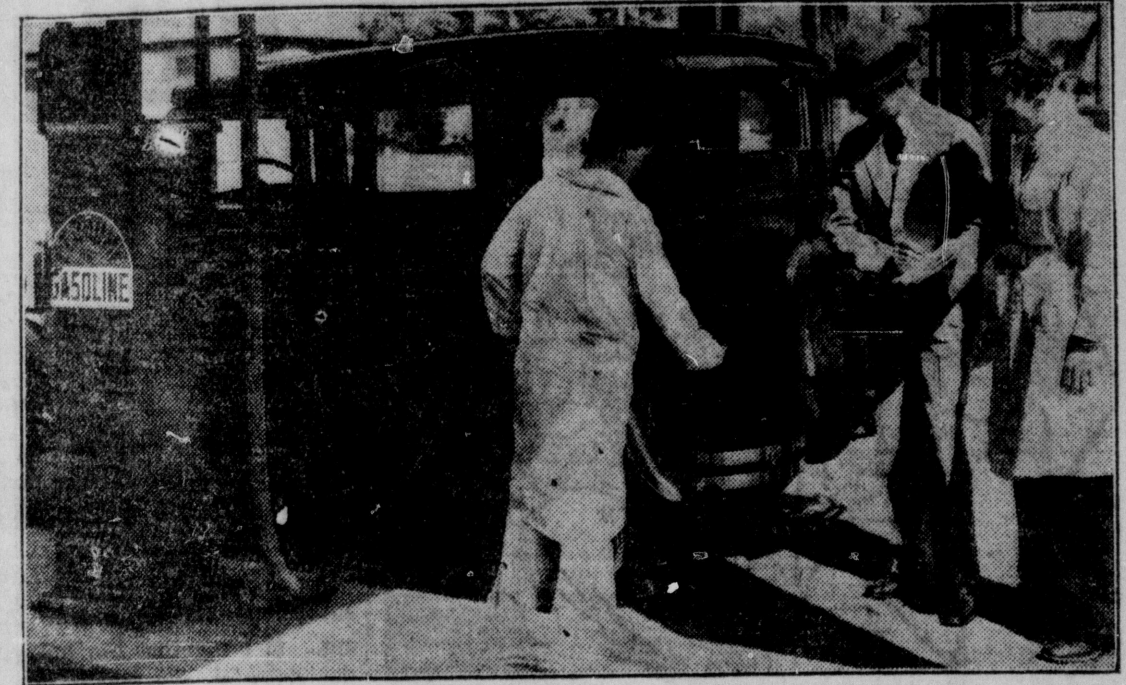

The huge sum will be divided three ways, one-third going to the counties, a third to the state for new construction work, and the remainder to the state for maintenance and reconstruction.

It represents money obtained from the gasoline tax, license fees, the motor franchise tax and federal aid.

"The continuing rapid growth and

ECONOMY GAS PROVES ITSELF

An average of 24.8 miles to the gallon of Economy gasoline was recently made in a sedan driven through Los Angeles city traffic, by J. H. Innes in a demonstration run for the Wilshire Oil company. L. L. Brown, manager of the Southern California division of the National Automobile club, who acted as observer during the test, is shown checking Economy gasoline at start of run. 87 stops and starts were made during the demonstration.

31 YEAR OLD PACKARD GETS FINAL TEST BEFORE BEING PLACED IN SCHOOL MUSEUM

The first Packard car ever built, old Model A-1, "born" November 6, 1899, has been taken from its resting place in the factories of the Packard Motor Car Company and shortly in a new shiny coat of paint will take an honored place in a great university building left as a gift to his Alma Mater by the old car's builder the late J. W. Packard.

When the dust of years had been brushed off Model A-1 veterans in the Packard factory organization declared that it looked just the same as it did when new, except for dulled brass work and lusterless paint which 31 years had robbed of its sheen.

E. E. Roberts, vice president of manufacturing, who began his Packard career nearly 30 years ago as a tool maker, asserted his belief that the old car would run as well as it did more than a quarter of a century ago.

As a result Roberts for an afternoon was carried back to the "good old days" of "get out and get under," the days when the owner of a horseless carriage tinkered with his machine all day to prepare for an evening's spin and then deemed himself lucky if he got back home under his own power after a ride of only a few miles.

Model A-1, after being repainted and polished and equipped with a

FORD BETTERS 20TH CENTURY LIMITED TIME

Shattering all previous marks, and establishing the remarkable time of 18 hours and 42 minutes, H. W. Madden and Edwin C. Bidwell were hailed today as the New York to Chicago champions.

A Ford Sedan was picked for the run, and it came through with a better performance than any other car, regardless of class, has ever achieved.

Their time is faster than that of the Twentieth Century Limited, and it is a remarkable tribute to the drivers, the car, and the Texaco crack-proof motor oil and Texaco "dry" ethyl gasoline which was used. Starting with the customary five quarts of oil Madden and Bidwell ran the entire distance without replenishing the supply.

The drivers both were emphatic in their praise of Texaco lubricant. According to them, these superior products played no small part in their remarkable run.

CARS WITHOUT LIGHTS TAKEN OFF HIGHWAYS

SACRAMENTO, Nov. 1.—(Special)—Motor vehicles operating without head lights or without tail lights were ordered off the highways today.

Frank G. Snook, Chief of the Division of Motor Vehicles, announced he had given an order to all officers of the California Highway Patrol, instructing them to stop such vehicles, when operated at night, and to refuse their drivers permission to proceed until the missing light or lights have been installed or until daylight.

The order applies to cars being operated with no headlights or only one headlight or no tail light.

Snook added, however, that it was aimed specifically at cars being operated without the red tail light required by law inasmuch as many fatal accidents growing out of the absence of tail lights had been reported within the last few months.

The same order will instruct the officers to see that the law is enforced requiring truck drivers to place a red light by night and a red flag by day on loads that extend four feet or more beyond the rear of the body of the vehicle. Snook stated several fatalities had been reported because drivers of commercial vehicles had failed to observe this law.

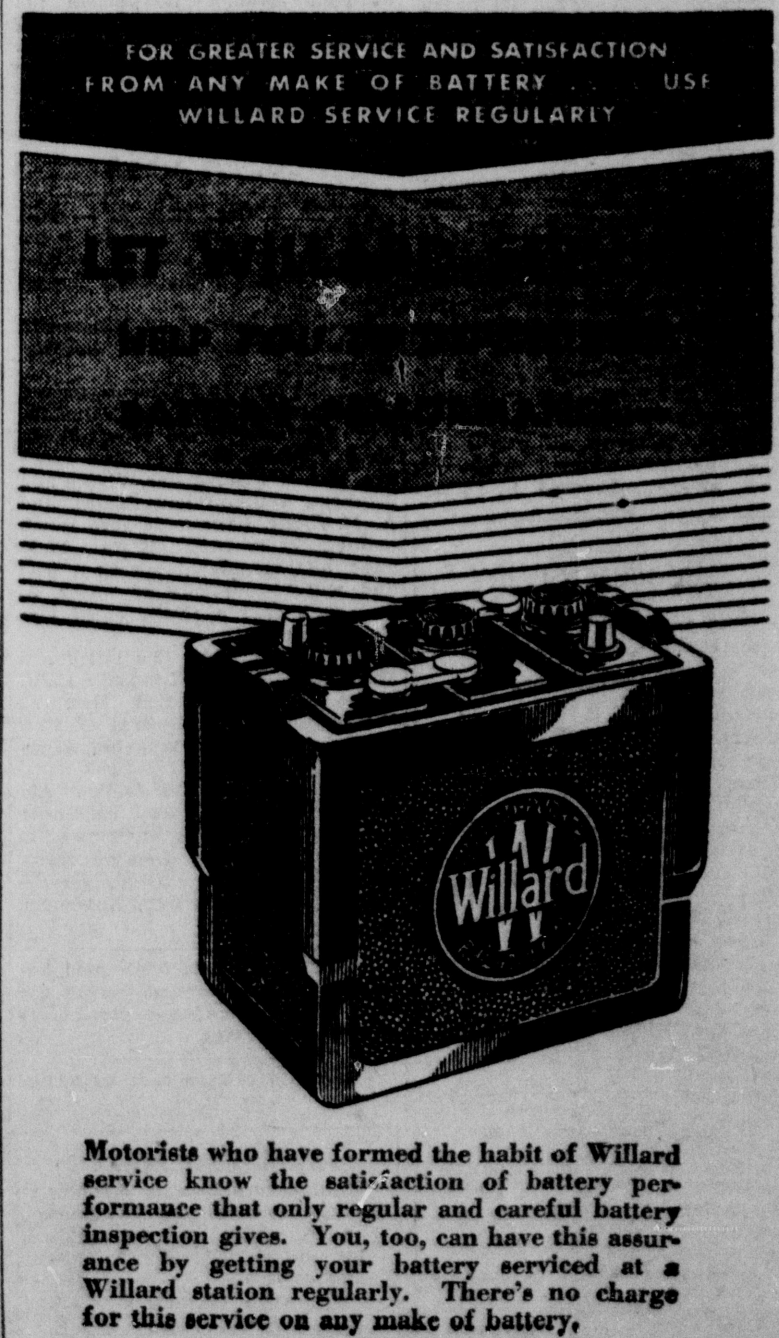

Shows Danger Of Using Choke Too Much In Starting

The prolonged use of the choke in starting an automobile engine in cold weather invariably results in trouble, according to E. A. Rowell, refined oil sales manager of the Gilmore Oil company, refiners and marketers of Gilmore Blue-Green Gasoline.

"Choking a motor means cutting down the amount of air admitted through the carburetor and permitting an excessive amount of raw and unvaporized gasoline to enter the combustion chambers of the engine," says Rowell.

"It can be readily seen what happens when the choke is used for long stretches. The liquid gasoline completely cuts the film of lubricating oil that safeguards the cylinder wall, and scored cylinders result. A copious quantity of gasoline in liquid form creeps past the piston rings down to the crank case when it dilutes the lubricating oil, also with the possibility of burned out bearings.

Figures On Poultry Raising In Orange County Given

1200 PULLETS NEEDED YEARLY REPORTS SHOW

(Editor's note: Following is an address given over radio station KREG October 27.)

BY W. M. CORY
Assistant Farm Advisor

The productive life of a hen is comparatively short when compared with other forms of livestock. This has necessitated the annual brooding of chicks for replacement purposes in every commercial flock. From production cost studies made on commercial poultry ranches in the past few years the annual replacement yielding the best returns to the producer under present conditions will range from 55 to 60 per cent. Thus it will require the annual addition of from 1100 to 1200 pullets to maintain a flock of 2000 layers. These will be used to replace those that are lost through mortality and culling. True, mortality and culling percentages will vary on different ranches, but the figures given represent averages as will be the case throughout this discussion. To be sure of getting 1200 pullets fit to go into the laying flocks, 2700 to 2800 chicks must be brooded.

50 Per Cent Cockerels

The beginner may wonder why it is necessary to brood so many chicks. Normally 50 per cent, or thereabout, of the chicks will be cockerels. A certain number will be lost in brooding. All of the pullets will not develop out uniformly, which with the selecting out and disposal of the slow developing birds will reduce the number available for the laying flock. Thus to have a safe margin of high class pullets, considerably more chicks must be brooded than what would seem necessary from a cursory study of the subject.

What were the results secured in the chick brooding study? The data was obtained by the use of a weekly report sheet which was filled out by the poultrymen and sent to the farm advisor's office. This report included chicks died, chicks sold, feed actually consumed that week, hours of labor and other expense, and income. While this study represents only three different broods of chicks raised by different poultrymen, it is believed that the results represent rather accurately the cost of raising chicks up to 12 weeks of age under existing conditions. Cost data obtained on the three lots of chicks, ranged in numbers from 153, the smallest lot, to 2420, the largest, with a total of 5937 chicks included in the study.

2818 Birds Raised

Of this number, 2818 birds were raised to 12 weeks of age. Some 2785 birds were sold and $4 died. In percentages, 47.5 per cent were raised, 46 per cent sold and 6.5 per cent died of the number purchased. An unusually uniform number were raised in the different groups with a somewhat wider variation in the number sold and a range in mortality of from 3.4 per cent to 8 per cent. The average mortality in this study was lower than many experienced, but the least experienced poultryman of the three had the lowest mortality. However, he put in twice the average number of hours of labor per pullet. Hours of labor per pullet ranged from one-tenth hour to eight-tenth hour with an average of four-tenths of an hour.

An interesting comparison is the number of chicks per pullet raised. It took an average of 2.1 chicks for every pullet raised to 12 weeks of age. If the mortality had been higher there would be greater number of chicks for every pullet raised.

22 Cents Per Bird

The average weight of broilers was 19 ounces, which brought an average of 22 cents per bird. Since the chicks cost 12 cents apiece, there was only 10 cents left to take care of feed, labor, mortality, etc. up to the time the chicks were sold. The bulk of the broilers were sold in the tenth, eleventh and twelfth weeks. By the end of the twelfth week the total income per pullet amounted to 23 cents. Total costs per pullet at 12 weeks, the largest items of which were feed, 29 cents, cost of chicks per pullet, 25 cents, and labor, 15 cents. Other items of expense included litter, fuel, interest on the investment, depreciation and miscellaneous, totaling 9 cents. Thus the pullet at 12 weeks of age represented a net cost of 55 cents apiece. An arbitrary of 90 cents was given them at the end of the study which would give the operators a net profit of 35 cents per pullet.

The average labor income from this enterprise was 50 cents per pullet which represents the net profit plus the value of the operator's labor. Farm income of 25 cents per pullet was realized which is the labor income plus interest on the capital invested.

Costs High At First

In considering the various items by weeks it is noted that the highest mortality occurs in the first week. Likewise the labor cost is much higher during the early weeks when the birds must be given closer attention in heat regulation and frequent feeding. Feed consumption increases as the birds get older, with the twelfth week showing the greatest consumption of any previous week. For every 100 chicks 276 pounds of grain and 378 pounds

TRUCK CROPS OF STATE AIDED BY OCTOBER RAINS

By J. F. McLAUGHLIN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
(Special to The Register)

SACRAMENTO, Nov. 1.—Rain-fall improved the crops and gladdened the hearts of California vegetable growers during October, according to the latest truck crop report of the federal-state crop reporting service.

Lettuce shipments will increase slightly during the next ten days. Carrots will increase loadings, pea shipments will remain at the present level, cauliflower shipping will increase, and bellpepper shipments remain about the same, the report said.

"The fall lettuce crop around Woodland and Sacramento is in excellent condition," it was reported. In the central coastal area, the Hollister district has started harvest on a crop which is producing very poor yields of ordinary quality lettuce.

"Salinas and Watsonville stock has suffered from the weather. Two or three days, reported to be the warmest in the history of Salinas valley for this time of year, caused the development of seed stalks and loss of considerable lettuce. Rains have not helped the general quality the last 10 days. In the San Fernando valley lettuce is just being thinned at this time."

Reports on other crops were: Fall tomatoes—In the northern part of the state tomatoes are past their peak production. Shipments will decline gradually in the northern section until terminated by killing frosts.

Cauliflower—Fields in the southern counties have been making only fair growth. In the Santa Maria-Guadalupe district, the crop is reported in excellent condition, and in Monterey county it is normal.

Fall carrots—Good growth in all portions of the state.

Fall peas—Harvest virtually completed in Santa Clara county. Growers have had a successful year, with quality above the average for fall peas. There are approximately 11,500 acres of fall peas planted in the Imperial valley.

Celery—Harvest has started on early acreage around Sacramento and San Jose, with fields producing good quality. The stock in the delta is reported in excellent condition. A light rain early in the month improved conditions.

RESTRICTIONS OFF

Restrictions placed on the movement of farm products due to the Japanese beetle have been removed. "Few beetles have been found in inspected produce lately, which caused the U. S. department of agriculture to remove the interstate movement quarantine."

Of mash were consumed. This makes a total of 654 pounds of grain and mash consumed in the 12 weeks for every 100 chicks. The cost of which was $19.03. The labor cost amounted to $9.22 and interest and depreciation $1.75 making a total of $20.00, not counting the cost of the chicks, which amounted to $25.49 or a total cost of $55.66 per 100 chicks. Income amounted to $18.75 per 100 chicks, the principal source of which was from the sale of cockerels. Subtracting the income from the expenses leaves a net cost of $36.91 on 100 chicks up to 12 weeks of age.

Often the beginner does not take into consideration the outlay of cash necessary before any appreciable return is realized. As a consequence many poultry ventures are not adequately financed to begin with.

CROCHERON TO CONTINUE WORK ON ECONOMICS

BERKELEY, Nov. 1.—With recognition by the United States Department of Agriculture and the University of California Agricultural Extension service has produced a larger volume of economic work than any other agricultural college in the United States, Director B. H. Crocheron announced a continuation of the program that has diverted much of the time of his staff from production to economic problems.

Farm advisors in the various counties, he says, will carry on their campaign along the lines that it was first drawn, with five points emphasized as having stood the test of experience. These five points are:

Teach the fundamentals of agricultural economics, its possibilities and limitations. Emphasize the applications of sound economics to farm practice. Economics applies to individual farms with even more force than to groups of farmers. By which we mean, get farmers to study their farm management, including costs of production and help them make such studies when they desire help.

Advise growers who are interested in forming new marketing agencies whether their proposed plans are likely to succeed, as judged by previous experience. If not, help them to draw up amended plans that may have greater chances of success.

Assist existing marketing associations by pointing out to growers the limitations and difficulties under which such associations are placed so that they may not expect too much from such associations.

FARM COURSES BY MAIL PLAN IN CALIFORNIA

BERKELEY, Nov. 1.—Correspondence courses in agriculture, covering a wide range of subjects, are announced by W. E. Berg, publications secretary of the University of California College of Agriculture. These courses are prepared for farmers, farm managers, suburban dwellers cultivating the land, prospective settlers and others desiring specific and detailed information on the production of farm crops and animals and on the conditions of successful agriculture in California.

There are 21 of the courses now available and offered all the year; students may begin these at any time. The subjects covered are the culture of corn, onions, barley, pears, cherries, grapes, citrus fruits, olives, figs, semi-tropical fruits, vegetables, walnuts, and flowers, the production of dairy cattle, sheep, poultry and turkeys, and home ground ornamentation, lumber and cost accounting, and the principles of marketing farm products.

No textbooks are required with any of these courses. Various references are listed in the courses, for the benefit of students wishing to read further on a particular subject. The state librarians have signified their desire to assist in promoting the work of the correspondence courses, Berg says, and in aiding students in taking the work. Where a book or reference is not found in a local library, it will frequently be possible for the librarian to secure its loan from another library.

The fee for any of these courses is $2, a nominal charge made to cover, in part, the cost of mimeographing, mailing, postage and clerical work attendant upon preparing records. The courses are prepared by specialists in the faculty of the College of Agriculture. They have in view the agricultural conditions of California, and the methods discussed can readily be adapted to any section of the state.

Citrus School Opens Nov. 4 In Riverside

The only citrus school to be held in Southern California this year, according to Warren R. Schoonover, extension specialist in citriculture, will be held at the junior college in Riverside on November 4, 5, 6 and 7. Growers from Orange county who wish to attend the school will be welcome.

Problems involved in irrigation, fertilization, cultivation and soil management, citrus diseases and their control and their latest developments in orchard management will be stressed.

FRUIT GROWERS PREPARING FOR STATION VISIT

Director L. D. Batchelor was a recent visitor to Orange county and approved the plans made for visiting the citrus experiment station on November 4.

Those growers who desire to visit the station, are invited to do so at this time, when the work of the station and the investigations being made can be explained by the men in charge of the work.

The caravan will form at Placentia, facing west, and ready to start at 8 a. m. Proceeding via Placentia and Anaheim - Olive boulevards, the group will arrive at Olive at 8:30 a. m., where growers from the southern part of the county will be met. The delegation will then proceed to the Riverside Experiment station and arrive in time for the start of the program at 10 a. m. Those attending should bring their own lunch.

LAYING HEN NEEDS 4 POUNDS CALCIUM

A 200-egg-a-year hen must eat four pounds of oyster shells, limestone or equivalent, to supply enough calcium for egg shells, alone, writes Dr. R. M. Bethke in the November issue of The Farm Journal, national agricultural monthly.

If the calcium supply is short, she either lays weak-shelled eggs of low market value, or goes on a strike and quits work entirely. Moreover, she must have plenty of Vitamin D in order to assimilate the calcium. The principal sources of Vitamin D are direct sunlight, sunlight through a good glass substitute or cod-liver oil.

A dozen other kinds of minerals are necessary for her highness. These are plentiful in some kinds of feed and lacking in others. If they are not furnished, the quality and quantity of eggs are low.

The poultrymen who are handling high-producing flocks, supplying eggs to high-class trade, must be well qualified mineralogists, as well as high-class experts in many other branches of poultry raising, the article points out.

TALK ON FRUIT PESTS SLATED ON NOVEMBER 5

Beginning each day at noon and continuing 10 minutes, talks of interest to farmers, growers, and producers will be given during the week beginning November 3, under the auspices of the agricultural extension service, co-operating with radio station KFI, as follows:

November 3, "Citrus Question Box," M. B. Rounds, farm advisor, Los Angeles county.

November 4, "The Value of the Christmas Livestock Show," J. A. McNaughton, manager, Los Angeles Union stockyards.

November 5, "Coccophagus Gurneyi as a Parasite of Citrophilus Mealybug," D. W. Tubbs, deputy agricultural commissioner, Orange county.

November 6, "Water Conservation," by a member of the Los Angeles Conservation association.

November 7, "Why Some Farmers' Co-operatives Have Failed," M. B. Rounds, farm advisor, Los Angeles county.

COTTAGE CHEESE BOOKLET ISSUED

DAVIS, Nov. 1.—The volume of cottage cheese manufactured in California has grown from 10 million pounds in 1925 to nearly 19 millions pounds in 1929, says C. A. Phillips, associate in dairy industry at the University of California branch of the College of agriculture here. This increase, he says, probably results from increased knowledge of the food value of cottage cheese and additional information on methods of manufacture.

Phillips has written Circular 48 of the agricultural extension service entitled "The Manufacture of Cottage Cheese." This circular may be obtained free from the college of agriculture at Davis or Berkeley, or from any farm advisor.

Cottage cheese, the author says, probably was the first type of cheese manufactured, being made from milk that had soured or clabbered naturally in the home. Now it is manufactured on a large scale and by definite formulas that make for standard quality.

Low prices the past two seasons have caused many to abandon the business, the department reported.

IT'S ODD

No, it isn't a duck that little Buddy Harvison holds. It's one of nature's freak tricks played on an unsuspecting potato from the patch of W. R. Sedgwick, Seattle, Wash. It has the bill, head and body of a duck. Tufts of cotton were added for a tail and feathers.

1930 CROP OF TURKEYS SAME AS LAST YEAR

SACRAMENTO, Nov. 1.—The turkey, symbol of the holiday season, has already become a subject for discussion by the state department of agriculture.

Early reports indicate that the California crop will be about the same as in 1929. There are fewer turkeys in the Sacramento valley area this year and more in several counties in the San Joaquin valley and in Southern California.

Low prices the past two seasons have caused many to abandon the business, the department reported.

TOP PRICE FOR HOG RAISERS OF UNITED STATES

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—The story of the hog raisers will be told and re-told this winter as spokesmen in congress and elsewhere defend the Federal Farm board and the administration's farm relief policies.

The moral to the story is that the hog raisers did not raise too many hogs. No one has advanced any adequate explanation of why this happens to be true. But it is so and hog raisers are flourishing.

Chairman Alexander Legge of the farm board uses the hog industry frequently in explaining his farm relief theories. Legge says it is obvious that too many sheep and too much wheat and cotton are being produced. He points out that the agriculture department has been warning sheep men of over production for many years; that cotton farmers have been urged to diversify; that wheat farmers have watched surplus stocks accumulate despite economic history which has indicated the difficulty toward which they were heading.

On the other hand, Legge points to the hog raiser. At the present period of over production in almost every line, hog stocks are within three points of normal, Legge recently said here. The result is that hog prices have been firm throughout the depression.

The hog raiser, Legge says, does not have to depend on exportation of a surplus production. He is employed almost exclusively in producing bacon, pork, lard and the by-products of the porker, for domestic consumption.

Cattle raisers are in somewhat the same position as hog men, according to Legge, in that at least during the period of inflation which ended with the stock market collapse a year ago, they were receiving high prices.

but some new operators enter each year. Losses generally were again heavy this year, although not all areas suffered. Indications are that the proportion of turkeys ready for marketing at Thanksgiving will not be much different than last year, with a likelihood that the percentage ready at that time will be a little larger.

Then Clowny shouted, "Giddy-up!" The pony got a friendly slap, which made him start to gallop down the little winding street. This made the whole bunch laugh in glee and Copy shouted, "Mercy me! I hope he doesn't run away. This ought to be a treat."

"Round and round the pony went and then the pony owner sent the other Tines out to bring poor Clowny safely back. They grabbed the reins. The pony stopped. All of a sudden Clowny flopped. "That's all your fault," cried Clowny. "Common sense you Tines lack."

Just then a small cart came in sight and Copy cried, "Say that's just right for all of us to ride in. Come, let's take a little spin." The man who owned the cart agreed and Scouty cried, "That's all we need!" They ran up to the little cart and promptly piled right in. The Travel Man stood by and smiled. Thought he, "I'd like to be a child, and have the fun those Tines have. They're happy as can be." Wee Scouty drove around a bit. Then Copy took his turn at it. He shouted, loudly, "I am good! Just keep your eye on me."

Missing Letter Links

RULES:

1. In playing golf on the Missing Letter Links the object is to change one word to another in a given number of strokes which is par. For example, to go from TEE to PIN in three strokes, sounds hard but isn't: TEE-TIE-PIE-PIN. It's probably more difficult on a real course.

2. Change but one letter at a time and be sure the word you have used is one in good usage.

3. The order of the letters cannot be changed.

PHILADELPHIA.—Nine passengers climbed out of the Newark-Washington plane here to stretch their legs before the hop on to the capital. Meanwhile another plane, identical in appearance, arrived at the field. The passengers climbed back in this plane and took off none the wiser. After being in the air for a while, they discovered they were back at Newark again. The pilot was prevailed upon to take the surprised passengers back to Washington.

Program Enjoyed

Members of the drama section of the Fullerton Ebell club were hostesses to the vagabond hiking section, their husbands and friends in the clubhouse Wednesday night at a Halloween party, when the glories of a theatrical "first night" premiere were reproduced as Mrs. W. I. Cain stood before an improvised "stage" and announced arrivals.

As each guest entered, masked and costumed, he was asked to say a few words to his unseen audience. Later in the evening, prizes for costumes were awarded to Floyd Russell, as Mary Pickford, and Mrs. Clara Winn as Einstein. The men were garbed in feminine clothes and the women wore flannels and tuxedos.

In the cloister, long tables at which each guest's place was marked by a mellow persimmon, were arranged and centered with bowls of orange berries. The shades were drawn and candles provided the only lighting. Mrs. O. M. Thompson, chairman of the hostess section, extended a welcome to the guests who entered the room to a march played by Mrs. J. J. Alexander.

In the assembly room of the clubhouse, dancing with old fashioned Paul Jones and two steps of the Virginia Reel, was a feature of the evening. Mrs. G. W. Sherwood called for the reel and Mrs. Arch Edwards played.

"Knowledge is power"—if you know how to apply the knowledge. Just knowing vaguely about facts and repeating them like a parrot has no value.

Knowledge is the sum total of a fact, mentally digested and used. This brings me down to the crop of colds and sneezes some of us are heir to every winter. If we had sufficient resistance to infection we could escape these epidemics of cold, especially the persistent head colds, which are now known to be sinus infections.

This is where the knowledge part comes in. To combat infection, food rich in Vitamin A must be eaten (this is the vitamin which builds up the system against infections of all kinds.) Good sources are butter, cheese, whole wheat foods, apples and oranges and a good many vegetables. But eggs are outstanding in their richness in this vitamin and their value as a tissue builder as well.

I know the everlasting morning egg sets tiresome to many a youngster, but the daily egg need not be served at breakfast. What is wrong with serving it in a custard, in a soufflé, in a delicious egg nog for the after-school snack? "An apple a day keeps the doctor away" may be a good selling talk for apples, but an apple a day plus an egg will do twice as much for your child.

TODAY'S RECIPE FRENCH EGGS

(for 4)
4 eggs, hard cooked
1 raw egg, beaten
Cracker crumbs
Butter for frying
1 cup thin cream
4 slices buttered toast.

This egg dish can be served almost anywhere—it can be used as a luncheon dish, for the home dinner or for the entire you will need for a dinner party.

Hard cook the eggs some hours before you will need them. Chill and peel. Cut them in quarters, dip the quarters into beaten egg, then into fine crumbs and fry brown in butter.

Have thin rounds of buttered toast ready and cover with a rich gravy made by adding more crumbs to the frying butter and boiling to a thin gravy with the cream. Season quite highly and pour over the eggs.

For each portion the calories total some 535. With the exception of the 55 calories found in the egg, these calories all spell energy, and energy, unused, is thrifty put away by our penurious bodies as fat deposits.

Mrs. B. E. Jennings and daughter, Miss Mary Williams, of 2543 Coast Boulevard South, recently entertained a group of women from Riverside who represent a benevolent association with Mrs. F. L. McMillan as president. Covers were laid for 25 at an attractive luncheon with bridge as the afternoon's diversion.

Miss Williams was hostess at a surprise dinner party on a recent evening, observing the birthday anniversary of Miss Betty Monahan, of this city, with 12 guests present. Music was furnished by Harold Ahearn and Major F. Social.

A social meeting by the American Legion with the auxiliary as guests is set for November 13 at the Legion hall. All Legion men, whether or not affiliated with Post No. 232, are invited. Coffee and sandwiches will be served free.

Dance Enjoyed

A Halloween dance was held by the American Legion Friday night at Cabrillo ballroom. Pumpkin rolling, costuming, contests and other things were featured on the program of amusements in connection with the dance, with suitable prizes offered.

Hold Steak Bake

Dr. Margaret Bigby's outdoor grill was the attraction for out of town friends at a steak bake Sunday. Twenty-two guests gathered about the long table and among those present were Mrs. MacClatchey, of Whittier; Mr. and Mrs. Long and Thomas Long, of Whittier; Mrs. Donald Sether and Donna Sether, of Downey; Mr. and Mrs. McCumber, of Buena Park; Mr. and Mrs. Osmund, of Whittier; Miss Brown and Miss Lalance, of Downey; Mr. George Smith and Mrs. Wentworth and her son and daughter were from Laguna.

J. E. Dalton broiled the steaks. Dr. Bigby had two exquisite little ships as table ornaments, that were made by Captain Nelson of San Diego. They are marvelous examples of craftsmanship and took over a year in construction.

Dancing Enjoyed

Old fashioned dancing, games, fortune telling and special features combined to make a most enjoyable evening for members of the Business and Professional Women's club and their guests Tuesday evening at the Schwankovsky studio, with about 40 persons present.

The studio was beautifully decorated in Halloween decorations by a committee of Mrs. Nellie Schwankovsky, Dr. Rachel Gatzlaff and Miss Mary Saunders. Mrs. Jean Stovel had charge of the punch bowl.

A weird-looking ghost greeted guests as they entered the studio. Each guest was required to walk a chalkline, looking through the large end of a full glass.

Old fashioned dancing proved so alluring that the card tables were deserted and all engaged in dancing. Good music was provided by the Foy family, Mr. and Mrs. Foy and daughter, Evelyn, visiting the John Martin family in the canyon.

Club To Meet

The Music Lovers' club will hold its November meeting November 6 at the home of J. Roy Smith on Cliff drive. The musical program will be given by juniors of the organization. The program is in charge of Nellie Schwankovsky.

BOOK REVIEWS

Last February I reviewed another book on this subject: "Kindred Arts, Conversation and Public Speaking" by former Chief Justice William Howard Taft. That book was interesting but it was not as practical nor as complete as this one.

"Beggars Abroad," by Jim Tully, published by Doubleday, Doran, "Beggars Abroad" is Tully's account of his trip abroad, all very conventional except that he is able to relate a personal interview with Bernard Shaw and James Joyce. Yet he tells it in his own manner in part as follows: "I left America to escape boredom. I had wandered nearly all my life in its every faraway section. I had found it a land of fakers and fools; of those who grope for light and are content to live in darkness; of gentlemen who talk of chivalry and lynch black men in the dark; of reformers and informers, all the people who have made America the most gruesome and grotesque show on earth."

"I left America tired of play. I returned eager to see another act in the human melodrama."

That's Tully, always contemptuous of human aspirations; never far above the hobo he claims to pick upon the fakeries and limitations of the established order of things.

He visits Westminster Abbey, the London slums, Napoleon's tomb, the Eiffel tower, the grave of the unknown soldier, cathedral of Notre Dame, French revolutionary prisons and numerous other continental tourist objectives; he even has the annoyance of getting a passport, haggling with taxi drivers, adds his personal opinion as to their honesty and recites his experiences like any one else, adding here and there his Tully touch.

His description of Hyde Park, London, where every radical, rebel, believer and agnostic is permitted to harangue as much as he pleases, shows Tully at his best. Here he is among the disgruntled, he knows so well, and describes them in a manner all his own.

A woman mounting the rostrum he describes as follows: "Her eyes were heavy, her nose was red, she looked as ancient as adultery and less inviting."

He observes that "bad cooking in England is as plentiful as hypocrisy." Looking over a graveyard of French heroes he remarks, "All these lads were young and foolish enough to be martyred for opinions." Again, "the hotel was as dreary as a Russian in love." "One of the littlest of human mongrels of the London alleys breaks out with a pouter pigeon feeling as he announces, 'When we salute the family of French peasants is encompassed in the words, "their faces made docile by labor, peace glowed in faces which bore no traces of envy or malice, merely a resigned stupidity."

He tells an interesting yarn about the sinking of the Titanic. Two card sharps regularly fleecing foolish passengers at cards are on board when the boat goes down, both are saved. One robs a wealthy woman and pushes her back into the hold as he makes his way to safety. Years later the Jew thief dies of consumption in Arizona. His partner in card thievery never forgave him for his action in robbing

Westminster

Entertain Pupils

Each of the teachers of the Westminster school arranged for at least one-half hour in observance of Halloween Friday for the enjoyment of the children. In the first four grades the teachers, Mrs. Adams, first grade; Mrs. Johnsen, second; Miss McMillen, third, and Mrs. Brown, fourth, combined their art work and party, the children being given nut cups to make in the Halloween colors and when completed they were filled with candy corn and candy owls and other typical reminders of the holiday.

Children's Guests

The Aloha Rebekah lodge entertained at I. O. O. F. hall for the children one evening and following a program there were games and contests in charge of the noble grand, Mrs. Beatrice Knapp, and refreshments of pumpkin pie and apples were served.

The Past Noble Grand club met Thursday afternoon at I. O. O. F. hall with Mrs. Nellie Morgan as hostess. First in cards was won by Mrs. Morris for members, and high for guests by Mrs. Maude Michel and second by Mrs. Edna Rivers. Present at the party were Mrs. Alice Hare, Mrs. Nellie Parr, Mrs. May Mansperger, Mrs. Winifred Morris, Mrs. India McDaniel, Mrs. Maude Michel, Mrs. Edna Rivers and Mrs. Morgan.

The woman. A well told tale and it was essentially true. Tully's experiences are not unusual but are well told.

EVENING SALUTATION

"I do not wish to be bothered by suggestions from persons who have never made or saved a dollar, telling me how to spend a million."
—HENRY FORD.

LUCAS OR JEFFREY, WHICH?

In the fifth supervisorial district there is a severe contest for the election. It lies between the present incumbent, George Jeffrey, and Stuart Lucas.

All the enginery which a political machine organization has and the use of the county funds, including actually the road machinery, is being utilized for the retaining of Mr. Jeffrey in his position. The further the campaign has gone, the more completely it is shown that there is a direct connection between much of Mr. Jeffrey's support and the money which has been used by him for improvements in the district.

And unfortunately it appears in some cases that certain improvements were made with the idea of bringing certain support. When money is used for the building of highways, or when the rights of the county in the beaches is interfered with in the closing of highways, simply for the purpose of improving the property of individuals, or bringing their personal support politically to the man in charge of funds, like a supervisor, it is unquestionably using public funds for personal gain. Somebody in such case is being treated unfairly in order that someone else may unduly profit.

It amounts to a dangerous condition, for as time proceeds, the funds of the county are used to support and protect men in political power in charge of those funds, against one who is endeavoring to represent all the people instead of a fraction of the people. The Register has refrained editorially from participating in this contest, but when it observes the facts as they have been brought to light, and then notices also the intent to arouse the prejudice of the people against the candidate who is opposing this misuse of funds by raising the bugaboo that he is somebody's candidate, we believe it is time to call attention to some of these facts.

Why is it that there is a practical rebellion on in the fifth district against the conditions that have been prevailing?

Why is it that all of the supervisors of the county are throwing the road machinery into that district, and using the money of the county in special pieces of improvement here and there, if it is not intended to actually use county money to hold officials in power whenever they are threatened by an aroused public?

Apparently the present incumbent has had unlimited money to carry on his campaign, and his advertising would indicate this, and that some people, very specially benefited by his activities, have made contributions, both of their time and money, to help keep him in office.

Is this done for the general good of all or for the special good of a few?

Should this not insure the election of a candidate who is known to be capable and square, and who will see that the proportion of the money that belongs to the fifth district will be used in the interest of all the people and not for any particular group?

We believe with the facts before them the citizens of the fifth district can be trusted to vote for their own interests.

The least you can say for that woman who offered to buy the Eiffel Tower from the French government is that her h-p-us was high.

A FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT SYSTEM

During the war, when it was necessary to utilize the full man-power of the country in industry, the federal government instituted a national employment system. Under that system it was possible to move labor from the place where it was not needed to the place where it was needed. That system was a clearing house for the whole employment situation. It was a great aid in meeting the needs of the government to win the war.

When the war ended, an attempt was made to make that system permanent. But powerful industrial interests killed it. Since that time there has been no order in the industrial world so far as the employment situation is concerned. Recent events have shown the necessity of just such a system. No doubt much of the suffering due to unemployment might have been averted during the past year had we had a system whereby labor could have been moved from the great centers of unemployment to places where labor could have been utilized.

This situation has emphasized anew the need of a federal employment system. Col. Woods, who has been given charge of the unemployment situation, has already begun to organize along those lines. His program ought to lead to the establishment of a permanent system. The matter will be pushed in the next Congress. The American Federation of Labor has been clamoring for it, but thus far has been powerless to bring it about. Industrial leaders rather desire a surplus of labor in their particular localities as a reserve to draw upon when business is good. Then they let it go when business slackens up.

Much of the unrest of a period like this might be averted if it could be known where jobs are. There would be less aimless wandering in search of a job. It is the duty of the government to furnish such information to the man out of a job, just as it furnishes information to the farmer about crops, and manufacturers about markets.

PHOTOGRAPHY A BLESSING

The interest photography may add to history is emphasized by the news, today, that some of the film which was exposed by one or more members of the Andree expedition can be reproduced. People get really lasting impressions from actually seeing pictures of things which they do not get from any description in words. An instance of this was the pictures of Admiral Byrd's flight over the South pole. It was absolutely the next best thing to having been there, and not so cold.

Illustrations figured importantly in all books of travel and adventure. In "Carl Akeley's Africa" by Mary L. Jobe Akeley, for example, the careful co-ordination of picture and text added immeasurably to the book and finally the picture of the lonely grave, planned and executed so carefully in the heart of the jungle he loved, completes a partial biography of a great man whom one is not likely ever to forget.

The case of the pictures taken on the ill-fated "Italia" expedition when the survivors were marooned for so long form a part of the history of adventure and aviation. Photography has brought meaning to history.

Certain pictures should be preserved as faithfully and carefully and surely as are written records of historical events.

NEW MEMBERS OF THE HALL OF FAME

The 106 electors who make the annual choice of those who shall be commemorated with a tablet in our national Hall of Fame, have recently added the name of Walt Whitman to America's immortals. Who would have thought it possible a generation ago that a man who was classed as a barbarian, and whose "barbaric yawp" was almost a national disgrace, should share the Hall of Fame with Lincoln, Washington, Frances E. Willard, Nathaniel Hawthorne, and a few score of others of equal note?

To the casual reader of "Leaves of Grass," some of Whitman's poems seem like a catalogue of the human physical organs, or a list of roadside objects. But how much that great poet saw that escapes most of us! His verse does not flow on in smooth Lydian measures, but once get the spirit of his rugged thought and the reader gets a vision and a thrill from which he can never escape.

The National Horsehoe Pitching Tournament is to be held in Chicago soon, but the experts are not picking the winners. It will be a toss up, they say.

SPLIT SECONDS

Those who, greedy of life, have deplored the absolute impossibility of extending the length of the day, received unexpected assistance from science today with the announcement of the splitting of the second in one hundred million parts. Now, if we can just manage to move that fast! Mechanics are helping here, too, so that in the year three thousand people just may be moving around fast enough to do one thing in one hundred millionth of a second and another thing in the next hundred millionth.

Taking the Home Into Business

Christian Science Monitor

Women who have learned to manage their own homes prove the most promising material for business positions. It is said. In fact, there is not, it seems, the gulf between the domestic and a business career so often supposed. The woman successful in the one field is likely to be successful in the other.

These, at least, are the opinions of a business executive whose firm, with its branches, employs more than 6000 women. Coming from the head of a great organization, this view should cheer on the many women who have tried to convince their own masculine contingents that the qualities which go into the intelligent managing of a home and family are not, after all, useful only in some mysterious feminine realm and devoid of practical value beyond the front gate.

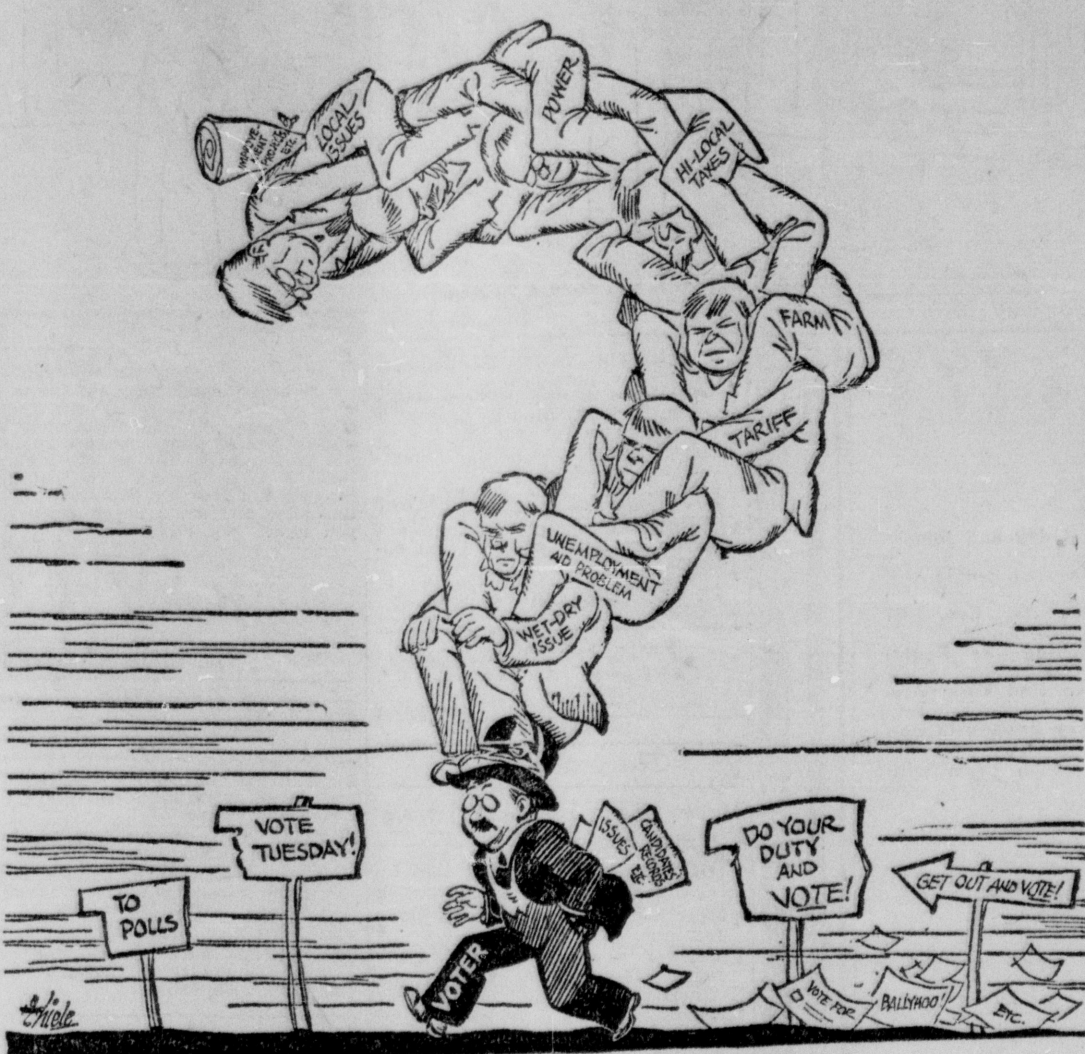

The subject has another aspect. If the training received by the home maker is of such excellence that it fits her for work elsewhere, should not home making merit a higher notch in the estimation of many business-trained persons, women as well as men, who are at present inclined to underrate it? A deeper respect for this most ancient and honorable of womanly vocations would naturally tend to encourage those so engaged to raise their own standards of efficiency, and would eventually lead more women into home-making courses to train or improve themselves in their present work.

It is an odd inversion of values that the so-called trained woman almost invariably goes into business—often into an inferior office position—while the untrained woman takes on the home-making job with its tremendous and important demands.

Most home makers grant that they need to bring into their housekeeping affairs a greater business efficiency, based perhaps on a higher and more practical appreciation of business training. On the other hand, consistent under-estimation of home making on the part of business women has more often than not deprived business affairs of a full measure of the graciousness, charm and unselfish service that are noteworthy qualities of the home. The business woman who aims to give an impression of masculinity by emphasized crispness and business is depriving the business world of the very womanly qualities of which it may be peculiarly in need. If, even generally speaking, successful home makers make successful business women—and this has been proved by many a woman in business—the home-making qualities of women must be worth developing, whether for home or for business.

The home executive, furthermore, by raising the standard of home efficiency, by actively working for the ideal of better preparation for home management, and by seeking to inspire in the business world a genuine respect for the training that home making itself gives, is not only fitting herself and others for work of a higher caliber in the home. She is also indirectly contributing to the world of affairs a finer and more mellow type of business woman, better able and more ready to bring into it the womanly qualities which business will some day find indispensable.

More Truth Than Poetry

THE PUZZLE

The antelope is mild and kind,
He has a calm and gentle mind,
And none of his soft-hearted clan
Would lift a hoof to war with man.
The zebra roves in harmless bands
All over Africa's burning sands.
Upon his own affairs employed
He does not kick unless annoyed.
The ostrich never is inclined
To start a war on human kind.
He dwells within the tropic zone
And asks but to be let alone.
And many other kind of brutes
Engage upon their own pursuits,
And from a shred of spite are free
Against such folks as you and me.
And yet these beasts of honest worth
Must shortly perish from the earth,
While rats, mosquitoes, gnats and flies
Regard us with malicious eyes,
And spend their days in evil strife
Against our so called human life.
And they, who with Old Nick are linked,
Will not for ages be extinct.
For man, though why nobody knows,
Destroys his friends and spares his foes.

EVIDENCE OF EFFICIENCY

Anyway, the law enforcement officers are making fine headway in their efforts to prevent extorting on the sidewalk.

A MERE AMATEUR

No long ago the premier of Turkey occupied a week making a speech which Floyd Gibbons could probably have made in two hours.

Is It a Dream?

By WILLIAM TRUFANT FOSTER and WADDILL CATCHINGS

Even in these dark days, there are business men who cling to ideals. They hold that it is perfectly possible to provide a job for every man who wants one. They even insist that poverty can be abolished.

But there are other business men who pride themselves on being "practical." They scorn "idealists." They ridicule everything beyond the range of their imaginations. Their own imaginations never indulge in the impractical exercise of climbing snow-capped mountain peaks.

These men understand a load of bricks, a yard of linoleum, a gold dollar, and profit-and-loss statement. Such things are real. Beyond such tangibles they see nothing but speculations, theories, fancies, delusions—the stuff that dreams are made of. Visions may be all right for poets; but business men should deal with facts.

One fact, however, these hard-headed business men overlook—the fact that there is nothing real but dreams; dreams that issue in ideals; ideals that determine the entire course of human events.

Nothing else ever makes a conquest. Nothing else is itself unconquerable. The history of the Greeks, of the Romans, of the Jews, is the history of the conquest of ideals. The force of arms is physical, transient. The force of ideals is spiritual, eternal.

To the young man who would do great things, we say, DREAM DREAMS NOW.

Andrew Carnegie and Marshall Field dreamed dreams. Henry Ford and Thomas Edison are still dreaming dreams.

Is it a dream?
Nay, but the lack of it a dream,
And failing it, life's lore and wealth a dream,
And all the world a dream.

Thoughts On Modern Life

By GLENN FRANK

THE COWARDS FACE DEPRESSION

Yesterday I spoke of the new credo under which American business operated at least in its more enlightened sections, during the decade of astounding prosperity preceding the market crash.

It was, I said, a credo that considered high wages, short hours, low prices, and large total profits as the four interdependent factors of prosperity in a mass production age.

It was a credo that saw the manufacturer's task as the dual enterprise of making both commodities and customers.

It believed in low prices so that millions would be tempted to buy. It believed in high wages and short hours so that millions would have the money to buy and leisure in which to use what they bought.

In the midst of depression the cowards of the business world have gone renegade to this new credo. They say that the whole mass production and mass distribution machine is breaking down under its own weight.

They interpret the whole present depression as a matter of over-production. We have, they say, keyed our machinery of production so high that we are set to produce more than the markets can absorb.

And so, say the cowards, we must cut wages, lengthen hours, and ration our industries so that they will produce only so much.

We must, they say, effect a balance between production and consumption, and the way to do it is to restrict production, and get production costs back to a "sane basis" by deflating the wage situation and stopping the nonsense of talk about shorter and shorter working days and working weeks. That the crux of our economic difficulty is the lack of balance between production and consumption no intelligent man will deny.

We shall emerge from depression if and when we bring production and consumption into healthy balance.

Nothing but disaster awaits us, however, if we take the advice of the cowards and retreat from the new credo and try to bring about this balance by cutting wages, lengthening hours, and restricting production.

The way out lies in a further application of the new credo, not in giving up faith in it.

OUR CHILDREN

THE LOVELY MAP

Bedtime stories are fine for the evening. There should be a quiet happy time before going to bed and stories are just right. Try another way of telling a bedtime story. Get a map that is full of pictures and gay with color, an honest map, and spread it on the floor. Lie down on the floor and take a trip.

You have no idea, if you have not tried this, what a fascinating story this is. An advertising map came to the house. It was just the thing for the purpose. The little five-year-old and I took wonderful journeys across this country. We stopped at the cities and bought all kinds of lovely things for all our friends. And we told the stories of the people who used to live in this country long, long ago.

Such interesting stories. Poetry and history, legend and romance abound. The map will last for a long time, as far as interest goes and it will last materially if you waste it on cloth and roll it up when you are through with it for the evening.

I have known older children, those who scorn the bedtime story, revel in a map. Imagine spreading out a map of England and following the old roads, stopping at the historic castles, visiting the king and queen and royal family, mounting guard at Buckingham Palace, taking tea in Shakespeare's little cottage, standing on London Bridge, looking down through tear-filled eyes at the stones on which Little Nell rested. And the bat-ties, and the poems, and the people. Great.

Or try Italy. Travel through Venice. Ride gently down the lagoon in a gondola, and the gondolier dressed in gay costume, singing. Walk in St. Marks Square and feed the pigeons. And stand with the big group of little children who stand spellbound before the old clock to hear it strike the hour and to see the Madonna and Child and the Three Wise Men, pass by in stately procession before their eager eyes. Tell the story of that clock, the history of that old town—and what a bedtime tale for eight graders that will be.

Of course this must not be a lesson. It is a joy time. You will have to know your history and your geography and your literature. You will have to have the charm of the story teller. Why not? There is no time like this to begin. You will enjoy the whole journey as much as the children, once you begin.

Maps are a source of culture that we neglect these days. Movies are all right in proper proportion. The radio has its place. But for home culture, and that is the most important culture of them all, the story, the close contact that comes between teller and listener, is most precious.

For this purpose use one or as many of these pictured maps as you can find. You can readily see what a world of culture and information it affords.

WHERE SHOPPING IS A PLEASURE

SHOPPING ALWAYS AND AT ANY TIME A PLEASURE—must indeed be an unequalled delight when the shopping is done at San Francisco. San Francisco affords so many opportunities for the purchase of what the character in fiction was wont to refer to as: "object of bigotry and virtue" that no one who has had opportunity to shop in the city by the Golden Gate will ever cease to remember the delightful experience. And then there is the matter of price!

The advertisement of one of San Francisco's department stores quotes most attractive prices for articles which in San Francisco, are really household necessities. First of all, one notes the Virginia Dare, the wine tonic which of all others is said to contain the largest percentage of alcohol, to say nothing of other drugs which render it the most "tonic" of tonics, is only 93 cents per quart bottle.

Think of it! Ninety-three cents for a large bottle of Virginia Dare, which is sold elsewhere for $1.50, if indeed its sale is permitted at all!

And what a tonic it is! Two drinks, it is said, are enough to cause any ordinary individual to feel that there is one sure and certain cure for all the ills that afflict mankind and that Virginia Dare wine tonic is it. Three drinks, well, those who have partaken of three drinks within a comparatively short time, and have survived the experience, seem unable for some reason, to tell their story. But it's surely great stuff, is Virginia Dare wine tonic!

And you can buy it in San Francisco for 92 cents per bottle! Italian Vermouth is priced at 98 cents, and Italian Vermouth is no slouch as a tonic.

Benedictine is only 79 cents a bottle, showing that in San Francisco the wind is tempered to the shorn lamb, and that even the practically impetuous man who has only 79 cents is permitted a place in the sun.

We find no mention of canned heat in the advertisement in question. Possibly in San Francisco canned heat is rated so low in the list of tonics that they don't care to advertise it or do anything else calculated to encourage its sale.

The fact remains, however, that when one cannot get Virginia Dare canned heat serves not at all badly as a substitute.

BRACER—No wonder that San Francisco and adjacent cities are in favor of the game of foot ball, and lose no opportunity to encourage it.

On Saturday evening last one hotel in San Francisco (The Palace) had as special dinner guests 2500 persons, all of whom were in attendance at the special Stanford-U. S. C. dinner-dance. It is estimated that as many were turned away for lack of room. All of the principal hotels had special programs and a big attendance.

San Francisco finds that as a business tonic, so to speak, foot ball has considerable merit.

OF GREATEST IMPORTANCE

—Just because it seems the right thing to do this column will here take occasion to advise the voters as to what they should make the chief order of business on Tuesday next. Leaving other and less important matters to be attended to later, they should go to the polls and vote.

Vote your choice for State and county officials; vote on the various propositions submitted to the voters, having, of course, first informed yourself whether they are or are not worthy of your support. But don't be a slacker; go to the polls and vote.

Every qualified voter should vote, not necessarily often but as early as possible.
